ABSTRACT

Background: One of the developmental tasks in children is toilet training. The ability of children to defecate in the toilet is the most important thing towards children's independence. In caring for children, especially in toileting children, it also takes time and patience to change and clean the pants when the child wet the bed. This allows parents to prefer to use diapers. Objective: To determine the relationship between the use of diapers and the ability of toilet training in children. Methods: This research method used a literature review research design with a literature study research design by searching the nursing and health research data base, namely Garuda Portal, Science Direct, Pubmed, Researchgate, and Google Scholar. Results: based on the results of the journal review, it was found that diapers usage with high intensity had lower toilet training abilities. Conclusion: there is a relationship between the use of diapers and the ability of toilet training in children.
